8.Human Values: on attaining Gender Equanimity:Seminar

Date: 29.10.2015

Technology has always had an uneasy relationship with human values and ethics. Ethics and technology seem to be at odds with each other. Such a contradiction is apparent in the way ultrasound technology is used to abort female fetuses in India. Nuclear weapons illustrate Janus faces of technology. The same thing can be said about Information Technology and its various avatars such as social media. Thus there is a strong case for inclusion of a study of human values and ethics in technology curriculum. As the world is increasingly dominated by Artificial Intelligence driven technologies, human values and ethics which define human civilization may be sidelined or even be marginalized in the wake of technological euphoria. The dominant discourses of technology endanger and marginalize other discourses such as poverty, inequality, violence and gender discrimination. In order to educate the students of engineering and technology about the dangers that technology pose to the society CMRCET included a course on human values as part of professional ethics in its curriculum. It is justified since engineering curriculum is overwhelmingly technical in nature and there is little in the curriculum which checks the technological orientation. The above event was organized and conducted by the Student Counseling Cell of CMRCET.

This seminar was conducted with an aim to make the students aware how harmful the technology can become if misused and how the basic human values can be compromised.

Basic Human Values

Kavitha

→ The theory of basic human values, developed by SHALOM H. SCHWARTZ, is a theory in the field of intercultural research. The author considers the theory as an essential extension of previous approaches to comparative intercultural research theories, such as the Hofstede's cultural dimensions theory, and has been extensively applied in cross-cultural studies of individual values.

The theory of basic human values tries to measure universal values that are recognised throughout all major cultures. Schwartz's theory identifies ten such motivationally distinct values and further describes the dynamic relations amongst them. To better graphically portray these relationships, the theory arranges the ten values in a circular structure.

In the 2012 article, Schwartz and colleagues presented a refined set of 19 basic individual values that serve as guiding principles in the life of a person or group.

Sreevani Human Values

Human values are the virtues that guide us to take into account the human element when we interact with other human beings.

Human values are for example respect, acceptance, consideration, listening, openness, affection, empathy and love towards other human beings. It is with these human values that one becomes truly able to put into practice higher ethical values. Such as justice, integrity, refusal of violence and ban to kill even in crisis situations.

Human values convey a positive and affective surge, which reinforces the rationale of moral values. They are the values that permit us to live together in harmony, and personally contribute to peace.

Human values are a tool to manage human relations and a tool for peace when the tension is high.

11. Women's Empowerment: Seminar

Date: 22.12.2015

For many decades there has been growing awareness that empowerment of women is crucial to various development agendas. There is now near universal consensus that empowering women in the form of education, representation in legislative bodies and policy making institutions, financial assistance and recognition of their rights is essential to all democratic societies. Such empowerment strategies challenge traditional notions of development which are male centric. Inclusion of women in various policies brings them into the mainstream. Their participation would allow them exercise power which would otherwise be denied. Such participation in political and economic structures allows them to have access to the opportunities necessary for exercising their rights. It follows from the realization that family, which is essentially a patriarchal institution, would not provide sufficient opportunities for women to raise their social and economic status. It is in this context that other public institutions such as government, banks, and industry have formulated their developmental strategies involving active role for women. For instance government has introduced reservation for women in local government and educational institutions. Similarly gender budgeting came to define annual budget making process that caters to the women centric policies.

With an aim to spread awareness about various policies of the government and other agencies about women empowerment CMRCET the Student Counseling Centre in collaboration with Women Empowerment committee conducted a one day session on Women Empowerment.

Women Empowerment Rajesh

Women Empowerment includes the action of raising the status of women through education, raising awareness, literacy and training.

Women's empowerment is all about equipping and allowing women to make life-determining decisions through the different problems in society.

Empowerment is a process that creates power in individuals over their own lives, society and in their communities. People are empowered when they are able to access the opportunities available to them without limitations & restrictions such as in education, profession & lifestyle.

Alternatively, it is the process for women to redefine gender roles that allows for them to acquire the ability to choose between known alternatives whom have otherwise been restricted from such an ability.

Women empowerment has become a significant topic of discussion in development & economic

Women Empowerment

Notes

The empowerment and autonomy of women and the improvement of their political, social, economic and health status is a highly important end in itself. In addition, it is essential for the achievement of Sustainable development. The full participation and partnership of both women and men is required in productive and reproductive life, including shared responsibilities for the care and nurturing of children and maintenance of the household.

In all parts of the world, women are facing threats to their lives, health and well-being as a result of being overburdened with work and their lack of power and influence. In most regions of the world, women receive less formal education than men, and at the same time, women's own knowledge, abilities and coping mechanisms often go unrecognized. The power relations that impede women's attainment of healthy and fulfilling lives operate at many levels of society, from the most personal to the highly public.

15. Essay Writing: Issues of Violence Against Women

Date: 02.02.2016

ISSUES of Violence

R. Sai Teja

→ Violence against women

Violence against women and children is a serious public health concern, with costs at multiple levels of society. Although violence is a threat to everyone, women and children are particularly susceptible to victimization because they often have fewer rights or lack appropriate means of protection. In some socially or legally acceptable, there by contributing further to the risk to women and children.

In past decade research has documented the growing magnitude of such violence, but gaps in the data still remain. Victims of violence of any type fear stigmatization or societal condemnation and thus often hesitate to report crimes. The issue is compounded by the fact that for women & children the fact that issue is compounded by the perpetrators are often people they know & because victims.

Issues of Violation Against Women

Aboriginal women and girls are strong and beautiful. Unfortunately, they often face life-threatening, gender-based violence and disproportionately experience violent crimes because of hatred and racism. According to Statistics Canada, Aboriginal women are three to five times more likely to experience violence than non-Aboriginal Women. Fortunately, this frightening trend has been noticed and intervention such as the Sisters in Spirit social movement and Kanawayhitowin Campaign have been created to assist in diminishing these violent events. It is important to first expose the violence against Aboriginal women that occurs before.

The Kanawayhitowin campaigns focuses both on interventions for men and interventions for women. The men are educated on the influences and impacts of violence against women in addition to fostering a change in attitudes and beliefs.

The Essay Writing was conducted by the Students Counseling Centre in collaboration with Women's Protection Cell of CMRCET with an aim to make the students aware of the issues that girls and women face in all kinds of environments.
